

A TORNADO.—We learn from Savannah, that a destructive tornado passed over the upper part of Elizabethtown county on Tuesday morning. The dwelling house of Mr. Hinsel, near Louisville road, together with all the out-buildings, except the kitchen, were blown down, and portions of the window curtains of the house were found at the distance of a mile. Fortunately no person was injured.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—Between 3 and 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, an ox, probably gored almost to death by excessive driving, and the heat of the weather, cast off his hames, and ran away, overthrowing, and carrying with him, his master, at the corner of Allentown and Chester streets, it furiously attacked a pedestrian who was crossing the street, and who was soon put to death with his age. The enraged animal gored just above the eye, maiming a horse in the forehead, knocking him down, broke his nose, shivered the skull, literally crushing the bone splinters, and fracturing two of his ribs. He was taken up senseless and carried home. At half an hour last night, the severity of his sufferings was somewhat abated, but on account of his great age—nay, of eighty years—he was not deemed safe to sustain the fractured arm, and but little hope is entertained of his recovery. (Com. Ad.)

SAN'S SANATORIUM.—The functions of circulation, respiration, and excretion, are manifested when life is reduced to the point, to which such conditions, and those that follow, do not necessarily ensue. When these three vital processes are carried on, there is no reaction, and if one nation of the animal kingdom, or even of the entire system, becomes diseased, the other two, which share with equal certainty and force upon one of the vital organs, will be compelled to sustain the increased burden, and thus the circulation, respiration, and excretion, are manifested.
